

Patmos - revisited.

We had been to Patmos twice before but decided to wait out the threatening thundershowers before a long sail to the Cyclades islands far out to the west. (our British “neighbours” had once been struck by lightning at sea, losing every electronic piece of equipment on board- £8000!). Beyond the cruise ship tourism, we got to like it better. Marvellous walks and views. One night out walking, we were amazed to see the most beautiful churchyard, each grave illuminated with candles- it was simply so pretty and peaceful. Doesn’t that say something about a country and people ? It is, however, one of the most religious islands, where St. John is said to have written the Book of Revelations in the Cave of the Apocalypse.
